BBC - History - Ancient History in depth: Vindolanda

The Vindolanda tablets (also known as Vindolanda Letters) are thin pieces of wood about the size of a modern postcard, which were used as writing paper for the Roman soldiers garrisoned at the fort of Vindolanda between AD 85 and 130. Such tablets have been found at other Roman sites, including nearby Carlisle, but not in as much abundance.

Vindolanda Tablets: Letters Home from Hadrian's Wall

Vindolanda lies just to the south of the curtain wall of Hadrian's Wall and has a very different 'feel' to other sites along the Wall. It lies upon the first Roman frontier in the north - The Stanegate Road and in a stunning landscape which lets your imagination really connect with its past.
